The one raw play came in the fifth inning, and really it was not overly raw, when, with men on first and seen ond and no one out, Landgraff tried to slam the ball over the fence. If he had sacrificed, and Messitt looked as a miable as a sitting hen when with the were signaling for a sacrifice from the coaching line, the hit that came later in the inning might have Nothing could have been prettier than the way the Colts put all their hits in two innings, that is, all except one. In the fourth inning three hits scored two runs, with the ald of scored two runs, with the aid of Rowe's wild throw, and in the fifth three more brought in the last tally to grace the Richmond scoreboard.

Although Pender is more than likely Although Pender is more than likely to be right about the matter, it certainly looked as if Landgraff had tagged Levy out in the sixth inning, when he also threw Sharp out at first. The umpire called Levy safe, holding that Landgraff had not touched him. It looked the other way, though.

Cowan's conversational ability got the better of him in the seventh inning, when he talked the matter over with Pender and allowed Arthur Smith to steal third. Smith died where he was, however, so the conversation did not hurt.

Verbout woke up and slammed out two hits yesterday that were really hits. The crowd almost died of shock some time ago when he lined out a three-bagger, but no one ever dreamed of his getting two hits in any one game The fact seems to be that Verbout lacks confidence in his hitting ability. If he would hit freely at every ball that looked like a good one it is believed that he would have a better batting average.

Arthur Smith certainly slammed out for a batting average yesterday. Three hits, one a double-bagger, out of four scored in the ninth to-day, and detimes at bat is going strong for any-body. The way he goes around the bags is also worthy of note, and a matter of grave concern to the oppon-

From beginning to end, it was one continuous series of clinces, with Ketchel ripping in uppercuts that jarred Smith to his toes, whenever he could tear loose an opening.

Smith had a shade at the end of the first, although he slipped to the floor heavily in avoiding an uppercut. Ketchel landed heavily with lefts to the siomach during the second, but Smith was quick to counter with his share of body blows. Just before the bell rang, Ketchel took a lead with right and left to head.

In the third, Ketchel dug in heavily with vicious, heavy uppersuts, through Smith's guard, and had him dazed at the bell.

Smith staggered Ketchell with two left hooks to the jaw, in the fourth, but for the remainder of the round. Ketche outfought his man.

WHERE THEY PLAY TO-DAY, Lynchburg at Richmond, Danville at Norfolk, Portsmouth at Rosnoke went to help out, the Colts slammed the face of Lynchburg against the grindstone yesterday afternoon and cooped the eagle of victory in the Richmond doghouse. All this in seven and a half innings, and the game called on account of rain or darkness or general debility of weather conditions, the spectator may take his pick, with the spectator may take his pick, with the score Richmond, 3: Lynchburg, 2.

Nay, nay, gentle reader, the Colts have not forgotten how to play baseball. It is a hard matter to smile and romp about the diamond and gardens when the sun is shining bright and the crowd yells appreciation, but when, as was the case yesterday afternoon, the workers have to floss about in what looked like a newly plowed cornfield, with most of the spectators absent and the weather looking like an irate wife at 3 A. M., there is no joke in connection with the establishment, and play is to with the establishment, and play is transformed into real work. This is what the Colts did yesterday afternoon, and the few spectators that were present appreciated it, although they could not get the vocal end of the game in good working order.

Outlook Gleemy.

The outlook for three innings was about as gloomy as an undertaker's assistant who has just got his job. Lynchburg started out as if eating Colis on the home plate was a matter of little trouble and much enjoyment. and the Colts couldn't wiggle intelligently. A young man gamed Griffin gently. A young man gamed Griffin Outlook Gloomy. gently. A young man named Griffin stood in front of the batters, and the stood in front of the batters, and the way he peeled off the benders was a matter of comment even to the catcher who has held him down all the season incidentally, a single and a double-bagger in the second inning, mixed with an error on Baker's part, brought one runner home.

In the fourth inning, however, the Colts took hold just as Griffin heren.

In the fourth inning, however, the Colts took hold just as Griffin began to stagger. Baker, who had been turning that error over in his mind for two innings, leaned his weight on a ball that looked pleasant to his eyes, and it went where it was told to go. Then Shaw followed suit with a clean drive to centre field that pushed Baker to second. Pinky Rowe, behind the bat, thought he would flip something bat, thought he would flip something new into the proceedings, and tried to peg Shaw at first base, with most dis-

Triplet of Hits.

In the fifth inning another triplet of hits came that netted a run on Cowan's part. Cowan started out right with a clean hit to right field. Thep Verbout tapped out one that couldn't be handled and went to first as the crowd laid down and gasped. A couple of files came next, followed by a base on balls to Shaw. Then Wallace nailed one that there was no use talking to, and Cowan came home with bells on.

Gravesend, N. Y., June 10.—The feature of the racing to-day was the brilliant performance of the Western filly. Ronud the World. She came East with a remarkable reputation, and she more than made good when she easily won the five-furiong handicap for two-year-olds. She was slow to get into het stride, but she quickly raced into the lead, had her field dizzy at the half-mile, and won easily by three lengths. Tim Pippin scored a very casy victory in the Patchogue selling stake. The races were run over a muddy track, but the talent had a good afternoon, as the choices were home in front.
